Nothing is as it seems at first sight, everything is in process and thus in change.

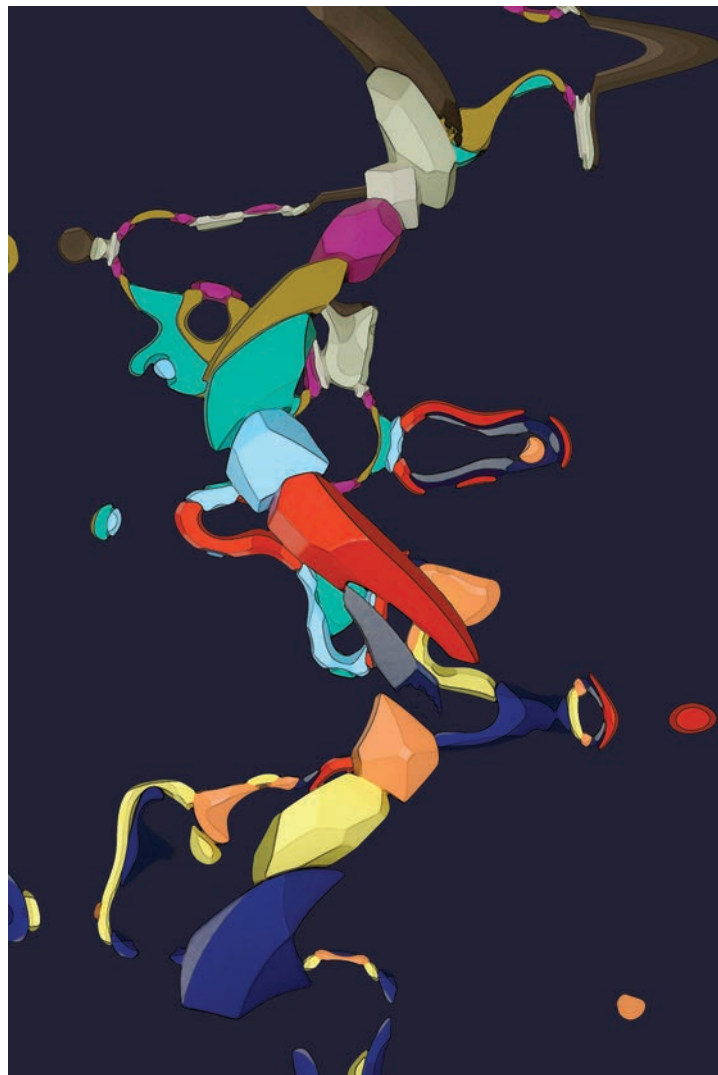

A digital photography is a light picture and a data image, an icon, a foil of a pictorial perception. Photography is material of different substances. That always means something provisional.

In order to arrive at new points of view, it sometimes helps to destroy familiar ways of seeing in the figurative sense. For me as an artist, for example, I am destroying a previously recorded photographic image through transformation, that is, through a new algorithmic order structure, in order to arrive at a new order of sight and perspective after a new order.

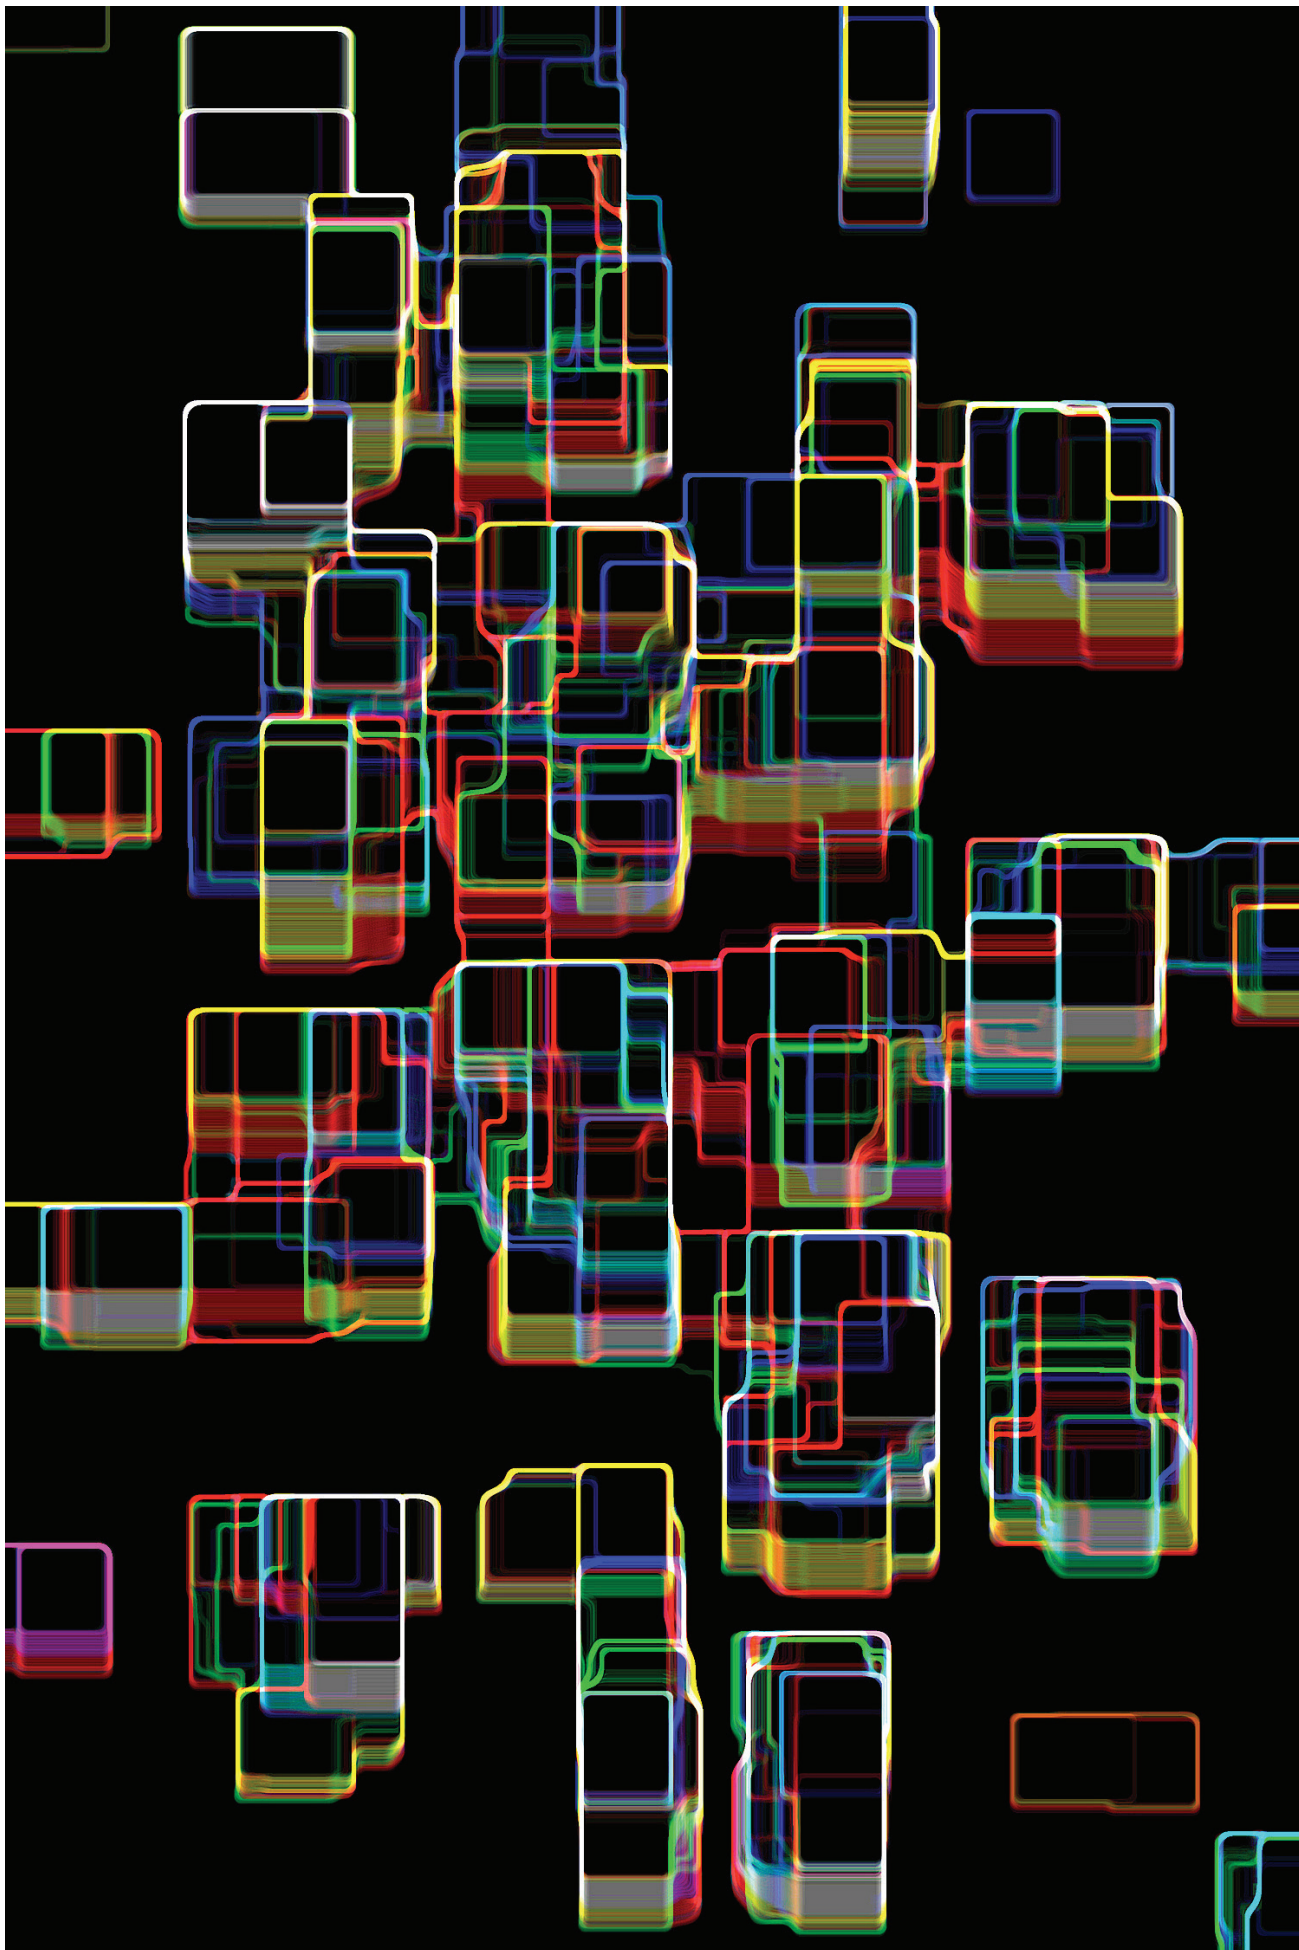

The beauty of the world, its inherent formal order, makes me search for the formula of its perfection. Is it the synergy of their inner order? Is it the irrational that is in every reality? I would like to find out.

Just as different patterns of perception can arise through choreography in dance, as an artist I can reconfigure the seemingly fixed worlds of a photographic reality.

I am developing autonomous artworks that exist as a virtual reality in a realistic photography. It is a transformation of real objects into abstract objects, the transformation of the concrete image into an abstract artwork, an abstract autonomous photographic artwork. My experimental digital fine art photography is a metaphor of processual change. © Ursa Schoepper
